"If we just use our heads, we should be able to figure out a way of getting into the circus free," Mickey Mouse remarked to his friend, Goofy, as they walked past the circus grounds one sunny morning.

"Gawrsh, but how, Mick?" Goofy asked, as he ambled along beside Mickey.

"We'll ask for jobs," Mickey decided. "And we might as well start now. Let's go straight to see the circus manager."

When they arrived at the manager's wagon, Mickey stopped for a second to gather his courage. As he raised his hand to knock, the door burst open and out rushed the circus midget and the circus thin man.

"You're fired!" a voice called after them. "Give your costumes to Coco, pack your belongings, and get off the circus grounds before show time," the voice boomed again.

Then, the circus manager appeared in the doorway of the wagon. As he stood there, watching the performers disappear, Mickey decided to take advantage of the situation.

"Heh, heh! Excuse me, Sir," he stammered. "Could you use a couple of willing workers?"

"Don't bother me, boys," the manager replied. "I've got enough trouble as it is without hiring inexperienced workers."

Goofy pulled Mickey by the sleeve, and they started to walk away.

"Wait a minute," the manager called after them. "Maybe I can use you both, after all. Yes, you look about the right size. Those costumes might fit you perfectly," he added. "Do you think you could learn a clown act before show time tonight?"

"YES, SIR!" Mickey and Goofy exclaimed in the same breath, without any hesitation.

"Just give us a chance!" Mickey grinned.

"All right. It's worth a try. Follow me, I'll take you over to the clown tent, and you can learn the routine from Coco."

He led the way to the tent and introduced Mickey and Goofy to Coco. Then, he told Coco everything he wanted done.

"Okay, boys, get into these," Coco said, tossing the costumes to Mickey and Goofy. "When you're dressed, I'll show you what the routine is. Hurry it up, boys."

When they were dressed, Mickey cried out, "Hey! These aren't regular clown suits!"

"Gawrsh, Mick, you're right," Goofy agreed. "I look like a seal! Ha! Ha! And so do you. Only, Mick, you look like a baby seal!"

"Wonder what kind of an act this is going to be?" Mickey pondered.

It was not long before they found out.

Coco began training Mickey and Goofy to act just like circus seals. They learned to catch balls on their noses, to bounce balls with their heads, to clap their hands like flippers, and to roll over.

"That's great, boys!" Coco announced. "The boss will be pleased with the way you broke into the act."

"I'll say we broke in," Mickey puffed. "I'm all in. But, you are smiling, Goofy. Why? Aren't you tired?"

"Yup, I sure am tired," Goofy sighed, "but I was just remembering what you said this morning. You figured all we had to do to get into the circus free was to use our heads. Well, we're doing that all right, pal," Goofy grinned, as he flopped down to rest.

YOU DID IT, LUDWIG! HOORAY!
BUT OF COURSE.
MR. MCDUCK! I'M GLAD YOU'RE NOT ANGRY.
ANGRY? WHY SHOULD I BE? LUDWIG'S MY BUSINESS ADVISOR, AND WE SPLIT THE PRIZE!
